Mrs. Henry's body had only just been bund and the authorities contend that here was no way for McCleary to have nown she was dead, unless he had ome actual knowledge of the killing. He was then asked why he mentioned irs. Henry's name.

McCleary was also closely questioned regarding all of his movements from the time Mrs. Henry was last seen alive until he was placed under arrest. Every statement he made was taken down. In this testimony it is said are many conflicting statements which will make it difficult for the prisoner to prove an alibi, although he asserts he can produce witnesses that he was not in the house after Mrs. Henry was last

Wolfinger Confirms Report That McCleary Confessed to Murder

HAGERSTOWN, Md., Aug. 28.-State's Attorney Scott M. Wolfinger this afternoon confirmed the report that Norman Bruce McCleary had made a signed conTession that he killed Mrs Nannie B. Henry, a widow, with whose pretty daughter, Miss Lupa Henry, he was infatuated.

McCleary, a wreck physically and mentally, sent for the State's attorney in the medical of the night and in the presence of six witnesses told detail by detail how he went to the Henry home, thoked the woman to death and the choked the woman to death, and then robbed her of $30.

The confession was written and bears

McCleary's signature. The State's attorney, however, refuses to give out a verbatim copy, but from reliable sources the confession, is alleged to be McCleary on the night of Thursday, McCleary on the hight of Thursday, August 15, paid a visit to the Henry home. Shortly after 7 o'clock Mrs. Henry asked McCleary why he persisted in coming to her house when he knew full well that his visits were unwelcome. McCleary replied that Mrs. Henry had libelled him to her daughter, Miss Lupa Henry, and that she had brought pressure on her to break off their engagement. Mrs. Henry said she did not even know the address of hrr daughtr. This was why McCleary visited the house.

Chokes Her.

Angry words followed and Mc-Cleary, it is alleged, sprang at Mrs. Henry and grasping her by the throat choked her until life was extinct. He then threw her body across the bed. Mrs. Henry put up a brave fight for her life, but afraid that she might give an alarm, McCleary tightened his clutch on her throat. McCleary decided that he would make a search for the letter from Miss Henry to her mother, but the letter could not be found.

The following night McCleary, it is alleged, paid a second visit to the Henry home.
Going up stairs McCleary felt drawn by an irresistable impulse to take a look at the murdered woman. Entering the bed room he switched on the current and flooded the room with light.

The woman's skirts had been pulled up slightly and McCleary noticed that her stocking bulged out. He found that the stocking contained $30 in cash. He took the money and left the house. Goes Back to House.

The next night McCleary decided to take one last look at the body. He was unable to resist the same overpowering impulse which had come to him on the second visit and went straight to her bedroom where the body

Going down stairs to the hallway Mc-Cleary found the letter from Miss Henry to her mother lying on the floor with other mail left by the postman, who had pushed it under the door. He pocketed the letter, which he after-ward destroyed and left the house. On Sunday, the following day, he left for Washington.

It was stated today that an alleged accomplice of McCleary was under surveillance in Washington and is within reach of Assistant United States Attorney Hawken, who has change of the Washington end of the cage,

Promptly at 7:30 o'clock, the trumpeter, stationed at Colonel Garrard's headquarters, placed his bugle to his lips, and sounded the "general call." Instantly the bugler up on the hill at brigade headquarters took up the call, and barely had the last note ceased echoing, than simultaneously every bit of canvas which has covered

There was no hitch in the entire program. The conical tents dropped as if by magic, and with as much system as is employed by the circus men, the thousands of yards of canvas were rolled up, tent pegs were pulled from the ground and thrown in wagons, and in thirty minutes, the last sign of the tented city had disappeared.

All Equipment Inspected.

A careful inspection of the property was made before the tents were struck. As was to have been expected, blankets and other pieces of equipments had disappeared in small quantities. Every man responsible for Suffrage Advocates the missing property was required to give a good excuse, or else had it charged against him.

The paying of the troops was done with the utmost dispatch. The men filed up the long hill leading from the camp to the paymaster's tent on the hill at brigade headquarters in double file. In alphabetical order the men, in companies, passed by the paymaster, giving his name, his rank, and the name of his organization. His company commanders stood by as the money was counted out and handed over to him. All the paper money given the men was

This was distributed to the men at 11:30 o'clock this morning. So, when they reach Washington this afternoon they will have nothing to do except march to their respective armories, stand a second inspection of property, answer roll call, don their civilian clothes and go to their homes.

Reaches Capital

Tanned by the sun, tired and dusty from their long march, the men and officers of the First Battery Field Artillery of the National Guard of the District reached Washington this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. By their arrival early this afternoon they constitute the vanguard of the 1,600 militiamen returning today from the vicinity of Harpers Ferry where they have been encamped on maneuvers for two weeks. The Signal Corps wil be the next to arrive in the city and after the several companies of infantry who left Camp Ordway in special trains today.

The First Battery of the Field Artillery left Harpers Ferry early Monday morning and has been on the march since, coming by way of Hillsborough, Leesburg, Blainesville, and Lewinville, Va. A city-wide search to being made to day for little Irene Callily, eleven years old, who has been missing since Sun day, last. Mrs. Callly, mother of the child, is bordering on hysteria in the Callily home at 924 Eighth street northwest, Sunday, little Irene left home to visit the family of James Reuter, at 501 B street northeast. She never reached here. Nothing has been seen or heard of her since.

An alarm was given to the police today, after Mrs. Callily, an English woman and a widow, had made inquiry at the Reuter home to find out why Irene had not returned home. She was nearly prostrated when she found that the little girl had not been seen by the Reuter's. It was the first intimation that she had that her daughter was not safe.

Police and detectives are without a clue as to the child's whereabouts, and are at a loss to explain her disappearance. Though the Callily family has been in Washington but three years, having settled here upon com-

It is believed that she would certainly have been picked up on the streets had she become lost. No unidentified little girl has figured in an accident so far as the police records show.

It is believed at headquarters that some kindly disposed person may have found the child and is giving her a home, until she is reported missing.

Inquiry is being made today of all friends of the Calilly's to determine whether the little girl may have gone to the home of some other friend to visit. Police officials do not believe that the little tot has met with foul play.

Only 1,300 Votes Separate Candidates and Contest Seems Assured.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 28.-Only scant 1,300 votes separate Governor Blease and Ira Jones in their race for the gubernatorial nomination. Incomplete returns of yesterday's primary give Blease, 55,418; Jones, 54,087, and J. T. Duncan, 1,566,

So close are the leaders that the result will probably not be known until an official count is held. A contest and recount are also probable. That another primary may be necessary is contingency.

Re-election of Senator Tillman by a safe majority is deemed certain from the latest returns.

The vote on attorney general, between Lyons and Peebles, is also so close that they may also be forced to submit to second primary,
